Hi [REDACTED]

Apologies for late response getting back to you; it's been a busy day here.

Not sure if we've missed your deadline, but here is a statement on the Taskforce report:

The eSafety Commissioner will work closely with a range of key stakeholders relevant to the implementation of the Taskforce's actions and recommendations, given their complexity.

This will include consultation with the Communications Alliance and relevant industry stakeholders to ensure that implementation will achieve the right outcomes for all parties concerned, including Australian internet users.

In the meantime, the eSafety Commissioner continues to administer a complaints regime for prohibited online content, including abhorrent violent material. Information about the regime can be accessed at safety.gov.au/report-now.

For further information regarding the Government's implementation of the Taskforce's recommendations, please contact media@communications.gov.au

Cheers

Subject: Taskforce report

Hi,

I'm a journalist for [REDACTED]

I am looking into the taskforce report released on the weekend in regards to the response to Christchurch.

Just wondering if the e-safety commissioner's office can go into detail about how the proposed site-blocking regime would work?

It is an expanded list of defined acts (violent etc) hosted on sites that can be blocked under the proposal? Or is it just what was outlined in the April legislation?

My deadline is 4pm today.

Kind Regards,
