

Online Safety Laws

There are laws in place to fight the most severe types of online abuse.

The Online Safety Act 2021 helps eSafety remove severely harmful online content.

Severe online harm can have an impact on people physically or on their mental health. It might be temporary, or it might have a permanent impact.

Severe harm to someone's mental health may include serious distress and negative feelings.

Some examples of severe online harm include:

- sharing intimate images without consent
- illegal or violent content
- extreme threats and harassment
- seriously threatening, harassing, intimidating or humiliating content that targets a child.
